THERE is reason to fear that trouble is store for the Government in connection with the conviction of some of the participators in the recent procession for assaulting the police. of the Kwangtung Inundation Relief Fund. Loung Asau's death was resolved upon, and one of the band was selected to carry out the deed, for which he was SERVIA DECLARES WAR AGAINST to receive $150. Their plans were laid, and in accordance with them Leung A din was invited to smoke opium in a house at Tai Tam Tuk. He was in the house till late, and he walked out in company with the conspirators. When they reached a spot lonely and retired enough to suit the purpose, the selected assassin, who was walking beside Leung Asau, suddenly plunged knife into his body. Asau raised a cry of "save life," and then fell to the ground, and died. He was wrapped up in a mat and buried the Hongkong Cricket Club was played on Fried forthwith on the hillside. As soon as the police received the information, they obtained warrants for twelve men, but it seems the conspirators got wind of it-too soon and only three were arrested. P.S. Butlin arrested a coclie named Li Aloi, and Inspectors Perry and Mackie arrested two men named Lum Afuk and Liu Tin Po. Li Ki Tuk, the man who gave the dinner, and Yau Kwai Sau, the injured husband, were not to be found, and the wife, who was arrested, could not or would not say where her hasband was to be found, or give any information to the police. Lo Akwai, the man who first let the secret leak out, feared the vengeance of the Triad Society, and he disappeared also. Li Aloi, the man whom P.S. It is greatly to be feared, for the reasons stated above, that this very grave crime will go unpunished. At present the police have absolute ly no evidence against the men in oustody, as their informers merely speak from hearing, and that is no evidence. There is but small prospect of getting any evidence, though the police are working very hard to rake some up, and as in the Tsat Tsze Mui case, our laws-effective enough in civilised England-seem quite inadequate when applied to people of this half civilised class 13th November. The first trial of the two torpedo boats recently arrived from Germany for the Chinese Government, took place on Thursday last. His Excellency Hsi Taotai, accompanied by Hsu-tajen and-Mr. J. A. Betts, C.E., went on board at Whampac about 4 p.m., and after inspecting the hoats proceeded for a short trip down to Yu-chau. No accurate measurement of apeed was taken, as the trial was only intended to test the engines and torpedo gear, and only 90 to 1001bs. of steam was carried, but with this steam when going full speed about 16 knots an hour was obtained. Two "Whitehead" (or rather the German copy the "Whitehead") torpedoes were discharged from the torpedo tubes, under a pressure of 80 | atmospheres, and travelled along in very good style for a distance of about 400 yards, whon they rose to the surface and were recovered. There is also very much more room below, then is usual in this class of boats. When the speed trial is made it is hoped they will reach 20 knots per hour. Whamped is becoming quite an important place sgain. There are usually four or five steamers lying there, and what with the shipbuilding and the work carried on at the Torpedo Department it looks quite busy.

The whole of the torpedoes and cables have now been removed from the river, but the obstructions in the Back Reach still remain and are likely to do so, as His Excellency the Viceroy is opposed to their removal. A meeting of the Foreign Consuls was hold on Tuesday last with a view of drawing up a joint protest to the Viceroy, on the subject, but I believe as they could not agree among themselves on some particulars, no further steps were taken in the matter.

He delivered but one lecture in this city, and that was given at the Young Men's Christian Association Hall, September 3rd, on the subject of the "Probabilities of Life

In 1858 he settled in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where he acted as anctioneer. It was not until 1863 that he began to write for the papers, and the humorous articles which appeared over the signature of "Josh Billings" became immediately popular. He soon entered the lecture field and was equally successful there. He has published several volumes of comic skatches, and edited an annual Allminax. which had a wide circulation. His complete works were published in 1876.

The following telegram gives the particulars of his sudden donth: MONTEREY, Cala, 14th October. Dr. Heintz was called to the Hotel Del Monte at about 9.45 a.m. to see Josh Billings, whom he found there sitting in a chair by the fire in the grand hall, or vestibule, apparently ingood health, nothing beyond a severe pain in the chest troubling him. 'He said: "My doctors East ordered complete rest from brain work, but," throwing back his long hair, " you can see that I do not have to work my brain for a simple lecture. It comes spontaneously; but sometimes I am diszy und everything swims, and all kinds of noises are in my head." While thus taiking he thraw his hands over his head and fell backwards. He was carried to his room, and in three minutes was dead. The body is being embalmed to be sent East. His wife is here. The face of the dead humorist shows no sign of pain and seems perfectly natural. He was to lecture here Friday night for the benefit of the local Lodge of Good Templars. He was a general favourite at the hotel, always good natured, and his light-hearted loke seemed spontaneous.

This was not considered quite satisfactory, because the Crown had the power of nominating a certain number of representatives beside those who are known as official members, such as the commander of the troops and the Colonial Secretary, and it was feared that these gentlemen would prove too powerful and would outvote the true representatives of the people. Mr. Heaton laid these views before Lord Derby, who finally saw no objection to granting the Mauritians "full control over their local and financial affairs as distinguished from matters of Imperial concern." A Commission to settle the franchise was next appointed, and on the 29th of July the new Secretary of State for the Colonies, Colonel Stanley, telegraphed to the Governor of -Mauritius approving of an increase in the number of members to be elected in order to give a preponderance of those in the new Legislative Council, and adding "The Order in Council will |
